SENATE.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Pike obtained unanimous consent to take up the Fourth of July claims bill, which was adopted as presented.

The postoffice bill was then taken up. Beck having the floor. The provision under discussion had nothing to do with the postal service, but simply looked to the building up of our commercial relations. Appropriation bills should not include new legislation. He insisted that it was bad policy for the Republicans to force on the administration provisions against which the President, Postmaster-General and House of Representatives all protested.

The Senator from Maine (Mr. Frye) had sought to make the foreign mail provision a mandatory one, but the Postmaster-General had shown to the committee that it would be detrimental to the public service and that the majority of the committee had not been able to submit to it. The amendment proposed by the committee limited the Postmaster-General, however, to American vessels, and he was to make the contract for five years. The Senators on the other side, Beck said, had not been slow to endeavor to embarrass the administration for political advantage, but they were going too far in endeavoring to force on the President and Postmaster-General, notwithstanding their protest, a course that they had shown was not for the good of the public service and which would only result in giving bounty or subsidy to a few persons. He dwelt with emphasis on the spectacle of an active commercial people permitting their mails to be in the postoffice day after day, waiting for a slow subsidiary vessel, while there was a swift vessel at the dock ready to carry the mails at once. Under the proposed arrangement, the Postmaster-General might know that a foreign ship, which was ready to sail, would insure delivery of the mail five or even ten days earlier than slow vessels, but he would be compelled to allow the mails to wait for days until the slow vessel was ready to sail. The matter was rendered more extraordinary when we remembered that a swift vessel was willing to take the mails for one-tenth the compensation which would be paid to the slow vessel, yet the Postoffice Department was required to see that the mails were carried with expedition. The object of this proposed amendment was to give a bounty to certain steamship lines in the hope that trade could thus be built up. That was a matter not for the Postoffice Department, but for the Senate committee on commerce. The present bill was the postoffice appropriation bill, not a bill to develop commerce. As to the effect on the subsidies, Mr. Beck quoted a variety of statistics to show that subsidies have never increased our foreign commerce, not excepting the Pacific Mail subsidy, which, he said, nobody was proud of, and of which nothing had come but corruption. A good administration of the Postoffice Department required that the mails should be carried in the swiftest vessels. Ninety-one per cent of our mails would in any case be carried independently of this proposed subsidy, and would cost not one-half the amount required by this proposition to carry what would be covered by the amendment. Continuing, Beck said the object of appropriating this $300,000 was not to benefit the mails, but to put money into the pockets of a few men or corporations who own American vessels and had a monopoly of the coastwise trade. It was an attempt to increase the appropriations beyond the amount which the Postmaster-General said he could well use. It was against the course recommended by the Postmaster-General and the President. It was making the Postoffice Department an instrument to subsidize favored individuals. Referring to the American commerce, Beck said no one would go farther than he would to extend it, but he wanted it done in a proper way. Men might fairly differ as to the best mode of accomplishing an object. A ship was but a wagon, so far as its uses were concerned. When a western man wanted to get his corn or cattle to Liverpool, what he would want to find out would be how much it would cost him to get it there. That will decide his profits. A ship costing $200,000 would carry his freight cheaper than one costing $300,000. That was an important element.

Plumb asked whether it would not be an important element in the cost of transportation to have the haul shortened by having a man who made a wagon, ship or locomotive live nearer to the point where the grain was raised? That Beck then entered upon an elaborate discussion of the tariff, in which he was frequently interrupted by other Senators, drawing from him, in one instance, the remark: "I would like to be permitted to finish a sentence once in a while." He insisted that when a man was compelled to sell in the cheapest market, he should be allowed to buy in the cheapest market. When the manufacturers had produced all that they could sell, they encouraged strikes.

Mr. Beck occupied, though with considerable interruption, three hours and a half.

Mr. Hale then addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment which appropriates $300,000 to pay for the carrying of United States Mails to Central and South America, Australia and China, at the rate of $1 per mile for each outward trip, but before he concluded his remarks the Senate went into executive session, and when the doors reopened, adjourned.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Lanham, of Texas, from the committee on coinage, weights and measures, reported a bill for the retirement and recoinage of trade dollars. House calendar.

It provides that for six months after its passage the trade dollars shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States and shall not be again paid out or issued in any other manner. The holders of trade dollars on presentation of the same may receive in change therefor an equal amount in standard silver dollars.

Trade dollars so received by the United States Treasury officials shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and re-coined into standard silver dollars.

The House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Wellborn, of Texas, in the chair) on the river and harbor appropriation bill, the pending amendment being the one providing that the appropriation for the Missouri River shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, without the Missouri River commission. The amendment was rejected, but it was agreed that a vote should be allowed on it in the House. Adjourned.
